

7 October 2014

"The Tell-Tale Heart": Reader Response

In this story, for instance say your neighbors get the car of your dreams, and you feel a certain way about it. Which is jealousy, and they come over one night to show you and just flat out rubbing it in your face. The feeling that builds up inside is unbearable leaving no other choice but to say congratulations and go on with the day; signs of paranoia. The next day you'll think of ways to get the car of your dreams or better, but first have to think of harmful ways for your neighbor to lose interest in the car. Starting by sneaking over one night to loosen the calipers on each tire, so the next morning they can complain and have a fit in the morning. Each day as the week progresses you'll think of obnoxious, and harmful things to make the neighbor opt out, and call the quits on their new owned vehicle. Therefore leaving you to get the car of your dreams now, by my behavior you can call me an antagonist but don't really feel bad about it now because the car is my prize possession and nothing would stop me from owning it. Insanity is taking over the mind, showing no sign of regrets or remorse. A few days pass and the neighbors invite me for dinner, they usually invite me every other week to see how life is, and to also see what's going on in the community. During dinner, the neighbor started talking about the vehicle saying "I just bought this car and it's already a problem". Personally in my head, I'm already celebrating and thanking the good lord. Then my neighbor said "I want to sell my car do you know anyone that would be interested"? He finally said the magic words! Which made me shock and couldn't believe it, making me to take a deep breath to refresh myself, then finally answered him in a casual manner and said yes. Few days later, the car of my dreams was parked in my garage never felt any guilt afterwards, so didn't confess up to my negative actions. In life, you won't always get what you want but as each day passes you'll be thinking about it more and more then you ever want too. Also making you go crazy and insane leaving you no choice to do whatever it takes to obtain whatever it is.

Last name 2

 Wishart Cathe...
12:37 PM Today Resolve ⋮

Use of 2nd person is NOT ACCEPTABLE in formal writing.

 Wishart Cathe...
8:42 AM Yesterday Resolve ⋮

This fragment doesn't work.

 Wishart Cathe...
8:42 AM Yesterday Resolve ⋮

missing word

 Wishart Cathe...
8:42 AM Yesterday Resolve ⋮

Fragment

 Wishart Cathe...
8:44 AM Yesterday Resolve ⋮

This student and I spent time revising the paper and working on grammar issues. I did not score this paper but waited for the rewrite. The student